The OECD will launch a groundbreaking report that seeks to quantify the who, what, when, why, and how of transnational bribery. The OECD Foreign Bribery Report is based on analysis of data emerging from all foreign bribery enforcement actions concluded since the entry into force of the Convention and will for the first time 'measure' the crime of corruption.
OECD FOREIGN BRIBERY REPORT

The OECD Secretary-General will launch a ground-breaking report that seeks to illustrate the crime of foreign bribery in real terms. The OECD Foreign Bribery Report is based on analysis of data emerging from foreign bribery enforcement actions concluded since the entry into force of the OECD Anti-Bribery Convention in 1999. It will, for the first time, ‘measure’ the crime of transnational corruption.

The Report was prepared to support the OECD Working Group on Bribery and the G20 Anti-Corruption Working Group in their efforts to combat foreign bribery. Its analysis will also help governments, companies and civil society to better understand and combat this insidious crime. The launch will be followed by a high-level roundtable discussion and interactive session open to questions from the audience.

DATE: 2 December 2014
TIME: 16.30-18.00
PLACE: OECD Conference Centre

The launch will be open to the public and media and webcast live.
